Feminists' critique of male power has long been caricatured as hatred of men. But it is feminists whose fight is motivated by the belief that men can be better, if we can make clear that they, too, benefit from a safer, more equal and more just world. We have little choice but to try — men still control so much, and besides, many of us love them. Our intimate lives, where we are the most vulnerable and the least rational, are the hardest to reconcile with politics. And the very idea that men and women can and should be equal partners is only a generation or two old. Most of us, even now, are just making it up as we go along.

The real objection to capital punishment doesn't lie against the actual extermination of the condemned, but against our brutal American habit of putting it off so long. _____, every one of us must die soon or late, and a murderer, it must be assumed, is one who makes that sad fact the cornerstone of his metaphysic. But it is one thing to die, and quite another thing to lie for long months and even years under the shadow of death. No sane man would choose such a finish. All of us, despite the Prayer Book, long for a swift and unexpected end. Unhappily, a murderer, under the irrational American system, is tortured for what, to him, must seem a whole series of eternities. For months on end he sits in prison while his lawyers carry on their idiotic buffoonery with writs, injunctions, mandamuses, and appeals. In order to get his money (or that of his friends) they have to feed him with hope. Now and then, by the imbecility of a judge or some trick of juristic science, they actually justify it. But let us say that, his money all gone, they finally throw up their hands. Their client is now ready for the rope or the chair. But he must still wait for months before it fetches him.

In medical usage, a “placebo” is a treatment that has no specific physical or chemical action on the condition being treated, but is given to affect symptoms by a psychologic mechanism, rather than a purely physical one. The mass media serves as an important part of the cultural context in which women experience eating disorders. The consequences of an eating disorder include harm not only to their physical bodies through severe dieting, strenuous exercise, or purging, but harm to their emotional well-being. Eating disordered women become caught up in feelings of unworthiness and low self-esteem, which then succeeds only in driving them to become even more thin in order to have control over their own bodies. Research shows that there is a correlation between the amount of media exposure one has and body dissatisfaction. Studies often point to the media’s portrayal of an unattainable cultural ideal as having a[n] ① _____ impact on females’ self-perception of their own bodies, as well as ② _____ their self-esteem. Some females inaccurately perceive the shape of their own body due to a dualistic combination of lowered self-esteem and perfectionist values that may have been instilled through familial relations or other primary groups. There are many industries profiting off of this unrealistic body model. The cosmetic surgery industry is profiting at an all-time high. Women are paying over six billion dollars for purely cosmetic surgeries. Many women are spending an extraordinary amount of money to subject themselves to unnecessary surgery, which includes the use of anesthetics and oftentimes invasive procedures that require long recovery times, only to look more like our society’s cultural ideal, which is significantly below a health weight according to the medical model.

New Islamic State efforts to sow terror in Europe are pushing counterterrorism authorities to their limits. A call by Islamic State leaders for their followers to plan and carry out independent strikes against Europe bodes ill for efforts to stem the violence, officials and analysts say, given the practical barriers to constantly monitoring a large pool of potential attackers. Europe's open borders — a cherished centerpiece of the European Union — also make potential attackers more mobile than security authorities. Top security authorities have increasingly taken to warning citizens that Europe will never be fully without the risk of terrorism. The painful regularity of the attacks has fueled support for far-right politicians who want to reinstate national borders and restrict the flow of migrants to Europe — steps that would challenge the basic future of the European Union. European information about security threats is fragmented into several databases, making it difficult to piece together a full picture of suspects. The dangers may be increasing as Islamic State leaders shift tactics, calling for followers to attack Europe even without direct contact with the terrorist group.

- ⑤ Small scale terrorism of Islamic State can happen easily.

A way to cool the planet from greenhouse gases while simultaneously repairing the ozone layer has been developed by scientists. Researchers identified an aerosol suitable for something called solar geoengineering: a radical method of cooling the planet. The cooling effects of solar geoengineering have previously been observed following volcanic eruptions; however, the planet cooling effects of the sulfate aerosols emitted in the eruptions also produce sulfuric acid that is damaging to the ozone. By modelling stratospheric chemistry, the researchers found that calcite could be used to counter ozone damage by neutralizing acids. "Injecting" the aerosol into the stratosphere would both cool the planet and reverse the effects of ozone damage. "This research is a turning point and an important step in analyzing and reducing certain risks of solar geoengineering," said David Keith, the first author of the paper. ① _____ the success of the research, the scientists warn that solar geoengineering ② _____ be seen as a solution to climate change.

The origin of the veil in Saudi Arabia is unknown. The most accepted theory about the specific veiling practices in Saudi Arabia is that when the eastern coastal areas were under Turkish control, women of high social standing wore veils, probably to protect their complexion against the brutality of the desert sun. Another theory is that when Bedouin tribes made war on each other and raided the livestock of the rival tribe, the women were veiled so that the beautiful ones would not be carried off with the goats. Others said Bedouin women were such fierce fighters in these raids that, by a code of desert chivalry, women were veiled as a form of identity and kept out of battle so the intrepid men were spared the risk of fighting them. Regardless of the veil's origins, today few Saudi women are allowed by their men outside the house without a veil. The rule applies to women in all social classes. In public, women lose all personality and individuality to become so many black blobs gliding down the street. Each is covered in black, her face masked behind impenetrable black gauze. In the eyes of a Westerner, the veil is starkly symbolic of a woman's subservience to man in all areas of Saudi life. It sets the tone of a woman's confinement and states her total dependence on the male members of her family, who regulate her ability to function as a member of society.
