[21-22] The 200 signatories to the historic Paris climate accord may have agreed to a "rulebook" on tracking efforts to curb emissions at the COP24 meet last week in Poland. But there was little talk on countries actually ratcheting up emissions control. Global temperatures are headed for a 3 degree Celsius rise from pre-industrial levels although scientists have warned that anything above 1.5 degrees would be disastrous.

21. What can be inferred from the above passage?
① All the signatories to the historic Paris climate accord had made actual policies for curbing emissions.
② All the signatories to the historic Paris climate accord did not make a practical policy for curbing emissions.
③ Global temperatures rise for a 1.5 degree Celsius from pre-industrial levels.
④ The 200 signatories took the warning of scientists very seriously.
⑤ Scientists warned that Global temperatures are going to be headed for a 3 degree Celsius rise.

22. Which can best replace the underlined ratcheting up?
① eradicating ② increasing ③ intriguing
④ lowering ⑤ reducing

[23-24] The effects of an earthquake are strongest in a broad zone surrounding the epicenter. Surface ground cracking often occurs, with horizontal and vertical displacements of several yards. Such movement does not usually occur during a major earthquake: slight periodic movements called 'fault creep' can be accompanied by microearthquakes, too small to be felt. The extent of earthquake vibration and subsequent damage to a region is partly dependent on characteristics of the ground. For example, earthquake vibrations last longer and are of greater wave amplitudes in unconsolidated surface material, __[A]__ poorly compacted fill or river deposits; bedrock areas receive fewer effects. The worst damage occurs in __[B]__ populated urban areas where structures are not built to withstand intense shaking.

23. Which of the following is NOT TRUE for the above passage?
① During a major earthquake, horizontal and vertical earthquake usually occur.
② The characteristics of the ground partly affect the extent of earthquake vibration.
③ Densely populated urban areas could have the worst damage.
④ Horizontal and vertical earthquake do not usually occur during a major earthquake.
⑤ Earthquake vibrations may last shorter in consolidated surface material than unconsolidated one.

24. Which would be the most appropriate pair for the blank [A] and [B]?
① such as - clearly ② such as - rarely
③ as for - scarcely ④ for instance - scarcely
⑤ such as - densely

[25-27] Macroeconomics is the study of the whole market economy. Like other parts of economics, macroeconomics uses the central idea that people make purposeful decisions with scarce resources. However, instead of focusing on the workings of one market - whether the market for peanuts or the market for bicycles- macroeconomics focuses on the economy [A]. Macroeconomics looks at the big picture: Economic growth, recessions, unemployment, and inflation are among its subject matter. Macroeconomics is important to you and your future since you will have a much better chance of finding a desirable job after you graduate from college during a period of economic expansion than a period of recession. Strong economic growth can help alleviate poverty, free up resources to clean up the environment, and lead to a brighter future for your generation.

25. Select the word suitable for the blank [A].
① as a whole ② partially ③ specifically
④ purposefully ⑤ from a specific perspective

26. Which can best replace the underlined alleviate?
① allude ② aggravate ③ reduce ④ increase ⑤ cause

27. Which of the following is TRUE for the above passage?
① Macroeconomics uses the idea that people use enough data to reach decisions.
② Macroeconomics is selective in the sense that it focuses on a critical area.
③ Macroeconomics helps us to understand the future economic directions better.
④ Macroeconomics could result in economic recession and poverty.
⑤ Macroeconomics always provide a blue print for the bright future.

[28-30] In this first decade of the twenty-first century, the world community is confronted with staggering problems. There are 6 billion people on our globe and forecasters project that the world population will reach 10 billion by 2050. Those people will need food, shelter, and an education that will allow them to lead fulfilled lives. The twentieth century saw great advances in many fields, but these advances did not come without costs. Acid rain, for example, polluted our vegetation, wild life, and the very bodies of millions of people. Together, the people of the world need to stop the systemic despoiling of our planet. Weaponry, such as nuclear devices and improvised explosive devices, daily threaten the world's peace and progress. Religious fanaticism, hunger, and poverty have bred a desperate terrorism in many corners of the world. It is no overstatement to say that we are in a race for global survival.

28. What would be the best title for the above passage?
① Great Advances Made in the Twentieth Century
② Global Warming, Vegetation, and Wildlife
③ Great Advances Made with Significant Costs Paid
④ How to Lead Fulfilled Religious Lives
⑤ Desperate Terrorism and Global Survival

29. Which can best replace the underlined staggering?
① stimulating ② suspicious ③ abundant
④ astounding ⑤ stagnant

30. Which statement is NOT TRUE according to the given passage?
① The rapid growth of world population foreshadows serious problems to be dealt with.
② At a significant cost, we have made great technical advances in different areas.
③ Problems including nuclear devices and religious fanaticism are considered relatively easier to stop.
④ It is not an exaggeration to say that we need to resolve issues threatening the global community.
⑤ It is not likely that we can afford to provide enough resources to the growing population.

[31-33, 각 4점] The idea of neurodiversity is really a paradigm shift in how we think about kids in special education. Instead of regarding these students as suffering from deficit, disease, or dysfunction, neurodiversity suggests that we speak about their strengths. Neruodiversity urges us to discuss brain diversity using the same kind of discourse that we employ when we talk about biodiversity and cultural diversity. We don't pathologize a colla lily by saying that it has a "petal deficit disorder." We simply appreciate its unique beauty. We don't diagnose individuals who have skin color that is different from our own as suffering from "pigmentation dysfunction." That would be racist. Similarly, we ought not to pathologize children who have different kinds of brains and different ways of thinking and learning.

31. What would be the best title for the above passage?
① Neurodiversity and a paradigm shift
② Neurodiversity and its relationship with biodiversity.
③ Neurodiversity as a way to diagnose personal characteristics
④ Neurodiversity to individualize children's strengths and value.
⑤ Neurodiversity as a source for a clinical treatment.

32. Which can best replace the underlined pathologize?
① diagnose ② sympathize ③ assimilate ④ evaluate ⑤ criticize

33. What does the underlined sentence mean best?
① The common principle that we use for biodiversity and cultural diversity should be applied to the area of brain diversity.
② Discourse analysis is a helpful tool that can be used in common in all those three areas.
③ Neurodiversity brings our attention back to the areas of biodiversity and cultural diversity.
④ Biodiversity and cultural diversity are more advanced areas of knowledge.
⑤ Biodiversity and cultural diversity are used as models for a psychological treatment.
