25. 글의 제목으로 가장 적절한 것은? (2.9점)

People often say of a person that he "looks young for his age" or "old for his age." Yet even in the more extreme of such cases, people seldom go very far astray in guessing what his age actually is. This means that almost invariably age reveals itself by easily recognizable signs engraved on both the body and the mind. "Young for his age" means only the presence of some minor characteristic not quite usual. Stigmata, quite sufficient for diagnosis, are nevertheless there. An assumption of youth, or the presence of a few youthful characteristics, deceives no more successfully than rouge or dyed hair. "Looking young for your age" just means "for your age" and it means no more.

29. NASA explores a winter wonderland on Mars. When winter comes to Mars, the surface is transformed into a truly otherworldly holiday scene. Snow, ice, and frost accompany the season's sub-zero temperatures. Some of the coldest of these occur at the planet's poles, where it gets as low as -190°F or -123℃. Cold as it is, don't expect snow drifts worthy of the Rocky Mountains on the Earth. No region of Mars gets more than only a few feet of snow, most of which falls over extremely flat areas. And the Red Planet's elliptical orbit means it takes many more months for winter to come around: a single Mars year is around two Earth years.
① NASA explores Mars during the holiday season.
② Mars must have snow, ice, and frost just like the Earth.
③ It is coldest in Mars' poles reaching -190°F or -123℃.
④ It snows in Mars as much as in the Rocky Mountains.

I hope to have legs more worthy to bear such a noble crown; it is a pity they are so slim and slight." At that moment a Hunter approached and sent an arrow whistling after him. Away bounded the Hart, and soon, by the aid of his nimble legs, was nearly out of sight of the Hunter; but not noticing where he was going, he passed under some trees with branches growing low down in which his antlers were caught, so that the Hunter had time to come up. "Alas! Alas!" cried the Hart.

(32-33) In 2022, Amazon could be held responsible for advertising 'fake' red-soled shoes which potentially breach designer Christian Louboutin's EU trademark. Similar red-soled high heels are advertised on Amazon by third party vendors without Louboutin's consent. The Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU) said Amazon could be accountable for any trademark infringement. Louboutin said the platform's selling model was "misleading the public". Amazon says it will study the decision. The preliminary ruling by the CJEU clears the way for Amazon to potentially be held liable for adverts for any counterfeit products sold on its site. There has been a long-running dispute between Amazon and shoemaker Louboutin, whose high heels typically sell for at least $600. Louboutin brought two cases against the company, in courts in Belgium and Luxembourg, in 2019 —alleging Amazon regularly displayed adverts for red-soled shoes on its marketplace without Louboutin's any consent.

⑤ Louboutin may have acknowledged the adverts of 'fake' Louboutin's shoes if a legal consent had been requested.

(34-35) Elizabeth had married Tom Willard, a clerk in her father's hotel, because he was at hand and wanted to marry at the time when the determination to marry came to her. For a while, like most young girls, she thought marriage would change the face of life. If there was in her mind a doubt of the outcome of the marriage with Tom, she brushed it aside. Her father was ill and near death at the time and she was perplexed because of the meaningless outcome of an affair in which she had just been involved. Other girls of her age in Winesburg were marrying men she had always known, grocery clerks or young farmers. In the evening, they walked in Main Street with their husbands and when she passed, they smiled happily. She began to think that the fact of marriage might be full of some _____. (36-37) In 1900, the average life expectancy for Americans was less than fifty years. By the end of the century, that number was well over seventy years. In fact, since 1840, life expectancy in the United States has risen about three months with each passing year. And as average (A)_____ of life increased, so did average (B)_____. While people often face a period of very poor health before dying, that span has shrunk, due mostly to medical advances. In the words of Harvard University Professor David Cutler, "Where we used to see people who are very, very sick for the final six or seven years of their lives, that's now far less common. People are living to older ages and we are adding healthy years, not debilitated ones."

But all this must be taken in balance. Although average quality of life has increased, the short span before death can be a harrowing period for many of society's most elderly—a time when quality of life, actually, is at its worst. In 2011, a National Institute of Aging study estimated that 25-30 percent of people aged 85 or older suffered from dementia. The authors further commented that dementia prevalence is expected to rise dramatically with the aging of the population worldwide.

⑤ Some researchers expect that dementia prevalence would skyrocket among the elderly.

(38-40) Food, water and shelter are necessities for every single one of us. They make up the bottom and foundational layer of Maslow's hierarchy of needs. When these most basic needs are not met, the opportunity to grow, learn and thrive is restricted. We believe access to nutritious, culturally relevant food is a human right. Today, _____

The pandemic created incredible stress to the social safety net. Among its many impacts was an enormous and almost immediate explosion of food need necessitating a community and government response unmatched in our lifetimes. Pandemic response programs like the child tax reduction and universal school breakfasts and lunches not only stemmed the tide, they effectively cut child poverty in half and enabled measurable declines in food insecurity.

These programs were allowed to expire this past spring just as inflation began propelling prices to rise. Families that had gotten back on their feet lost the ground they'd gained. In our region alone, more than 1 million people will turn to a neighborhood food bank or meal provider for the food they need to sustain themselves this year. The sharp increase in demand has mirrored peak pandemic levels and caused such significant and urgent food need that inventory levels in our warehouse were drawn down 75% by late summer. To ensure people facing hunger have access to the food they need today, we are rebuilding our inventory by dramatically expanding food sourcing.

⑤ Food shortage became critical, and food sourcing must be expanded to help people facing hunger.
