As scientists learn more about the hundreds of thousands of other parasitic species that do not harm humans, a picture of animal groups that play key roles in maintaining healthy ecosystems is emerging. For instance, parasites keep species populations in check just like predators do. Parasites also help to push energy up the food web, by making prey species behave more recklessly and become easier for predators to catch. While most scholarship on women's employment in the United States recognizes that the Second World War (1939-1945) dramatically changed the role of women in the workforce, these studies also acknowledge that few women remained in manufacturing jobs once men returned from the war. But in agriculture, unlike other industries where women were viewed as temporary workers, women's employment did not end with the war. (A)_____, the expansion of agriculture and a steady decrease in the number of male farmworkers combined to cause the industry to hire more women in the postwar years. Consequently, the 1950s saw a growing number of women engaged in farm labor, even though rhetoric in the popular media called for the return of women to domestic life.

23. What best fits in blank (A)? (3점)

② The great majority of women who joined the workforce during the Second World War were employed in manufacturing jobs.
③ The end of the Second World War was followed by a large-scale transfer of women workers from manufacturing to agriculture.
④ The increase in women's employment that accompanied the Second World War was longer lasting in agriculture than it was in manufacturing.

Today, about half the adults in the world own a smartphone, and there are as many subscriptions as people. In parts of the world without roads, landlines, postal service, newspapers, or banks, mobile phones are more than a way to share gossip and cat photos; they are a major generator of wealth.

For generations, social critics have worried about the impact of technology on people's stress. Trains and industrial machinery were seen as noisy disruptors of pastoral village life. Telephones interrupted quiet times in homes. Watches and clocks added to the dehumanizing time pressures on factory workers to be productive. Radio and television were organized around the advertising that heightened people's status anxieties.

And so it was inevitable that the critics would shift their focus to social media. But social media can be neither (A)_____ nor blamed for the increase in loneliness among young American students. Not, according to the new surveys, have adults become isolated because of social media. Users of social media have more close friends, express more trust in people, feel more supported, and are more politically involved. And notwithstanding the rumor that they are drawn into an anxious competition to keep up with the furious rate of enjoyable activities of their digital faux-friends, social media users do not report higher levels of stress than non-users. (B)_____, there is one telling exception: people get upset when they learn that someone they care about has suffered an illness, a death in the family, or some other setback.

In George Orwell's classic allegorical novel Animal Farm we are introduced to the fictional character Boxer the horse. He is described as faithful and strong. His answer to every setback and every problem is, "I will work harder." He lives true to his philosophy under the direst circumstances until, exhausted and broken, he is sent to the knackers' yard. He is a tragic figure: despite his best intentions, his ever-increasing efforts actually exacerbate the inequality and problems on the farm.

Are there ways we can be a bit like Boxer? Do setbacks often only strengthen our resolve to work longer and harder? After all, we have been taught from a young age that hard work is key to producing results, and many of us have been amply rewarded for our productivity and our ability to muscle through every task or challenge the world throws at us.

30. Which of the statements below best summarizes what can be learned from the passage? (4점)

① More effort does not necessarily yield better results.
② Work hard, but do not expect any outcome.
③ Intellectual ability matters more than efforts for success.
