Nobody reveals an accurate picture of their actual lives on social media. They omit the bickering, boring and unflattering aspects of their lives in favor of the fabulous moments. The downside of this "success theater" is that daily exposure to Facebook leaves people feeling Ⓐ_____. That constant barrage of other people's best moments creates the illusion that everyone else in the world is living these wonderful lives filled with success and joy and adventure while you're sitting there, well, looking at Facebook. This occurs on other sites like Instagram.

① looking at other people' Facebook encourages better self-care
② uploading pictures to Facebook has to do with high self-esteem
③ frequent exposure to other folks' Facebook could increase risks for depression
④ users of Facebook tend to be more outgoing than those who do not use it

When most people contemplate building a new home, they assume that the first order of business is to choose or design a plan to build. But, in fact, the first step is always to find the site that you want to build on. When you work with an architect, you'll find that the design for the house is as much influenced by the opportunities and constraints of the site as it is by your particular functional and aesthetic desires. This was eminently evident in one new house I saw a few years ago. The house was positioned on a hill, facing south overlooking a magnificent vista, but there was not a single window looking toward that extraordinary view. My guess is that the design had been picked out of a plan book long before the site had been chosen, and the original plan had been designed to be highly energy efficient with its Ⓐ_____ face oriented to the north. This new house had the Ⓑ_____ face oriented to the south — just the direction one wants lots of glass in most climates.

34 What is the purpose of the passage? [3점]

① To explain the importance of aesthetic considerations in house construction
② To show the close connection between the design for a house and its site
③ To offer a step-by-step guide to the house building process
④ To illustrate how to build an energy-efficient house

35 Which of the following is most appropriate for blanks Ⓐ and Ⓑ? [3점]

[36-38] 200 words

Similarly, in the real world, it should be seen as a serious moral failure when those with ample income do not do their fair share toward relieving global poverty. It isn't so easy, however, to decide on the proper approach to take to those who limit their contribution to their fair share when they could easily do more and when, because others are not playing their part, a further donation would assist many in desperate need. In the privacy of our own judgment, we should believe that it is wrong not to do more. But whether we should actually criticize people who are doing their fair share, but no more than that, depends on the psychological impact that such criticism will have on them, and on others. This in turn may depend on social practices. If the majority are doing little or nothing, setting a standard higher than the fair-share level may seem so demanding that it discourages people who are willing to make an equitable contribution from doing even that. So it may be best to Ⓐ_____ criticizing those who achieve the fair-share level. In moving our society' standards forward, we may have to progress one step at a time.

36 Which of the following is closest in meaning to the underlined word? [3점]

① exacting ② illogical ③ trifling ④ exploitative

37 Which of the following is most appropriate for blank Ⓐ? [3점]

① avail ourselves of ② take into account
③ refrain from ④ launch into

38 According to the passage, which of the following is NOT true? [3점]

① Rich people who limit their contribution to their fare share may not be morally just.
② According to our moral judgment, we should not hesitate to criticize those people who are doing only their fair share.
③ Setting a standard higher than the fair-share level is not always desirable.
④ Before criticizing people who are doing only their fair share, we should take into consideration its psychological impact on them.

In our society death is viewed as Ⓐ_____, discussion of it is regarded as morbid, and children are excluded with the presumption and pretext that it would be "too much" for them. They are then sent off to relatives, often accompanied with some unconvincing lies of "Mother has gone on a long trip" or other unbelievable stories. The child senses that something is wrong, and his distrust in adults will only multiply if other relatives add new variations of the story, avoid his questions or suspicions, shower him with gifts as a meager substitute for a loss he is not permitted to deal with. Sooner or later the child will become aware of the changed family situation and, depending on the age and personality of the child, will have an unresolved grief and regard this incident as a frightening, mysterious, in any case very traumatic experience with untrustworthy grownups, which he has no way to cope with.

39 Which of the following is most appropriate for blank Ⓐ? [3점]

① spectacle ② mystery ③ taboo ④ ritual

40 It can be inferred from the passage that the author takes a(n) _____ attitude toward the way death is dealt with in our society. [3점]
